BRITISH 8TH ARMY RECAPTURES TOBRUK; RACES TOWARD EL ADEM; IN HOT PURSUIT OF ROMMEL'S HOPELESSLY CRIPPLED FORCE

Loss of Tobruk Means That Tripoli is Virtually Only Supply Port Left to Rommel, as Genghazi is Being Repeatedly Blasted by Allied Aircraft

(By International News Service)

CAIRO, Nov. 13.—The victorious British 8th Army today recaptured Tobruk, symbol of supremacy in the bleak Libyan desert, and raced on toward El Adem in hot pursuit of Field Marshal Rommel's hopelessly crippled forces.

Aerial reconnaissance carried out soon after the Union Jack again was hoisted over the torn and shattered buildings of Tobruk showed the enemy still streaking westward "as fast as he can go."

Tobruk, knocked out as a port of supply to Axis forces by relentless air bombardments by U. S. and other Allied flyers, was seized after a swift thrust west from Bardia, 70 miles to the east.

(An authoritative British spokesman in London said that loss of Tobruk means that Tripoli now is virtually the only supply port left to General Rommel since Benghazi, on the western shore of the Libyan lagoon, has been and still is being repeatedly blasted by Allied aircraft.)

He felt it was out of the question that Rommel would attempt a "second Dunkirk" to disembark his troops since he doesn't have control of the Mediterranean.)

MOSCOW.—The Moscow radio reported today that General Albert Kesselring, chief of the Axis air force in the Mediterranean, has been dismissed for failing to inform the German high command in time of a threatened Anglo-American offensive in North Africa.

Splendid Ovation Given John Dudley, Tenor, Here

Six hundred music lovers heartily enjoyed a concert given by John Dudley, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Association, in Bristol high school auditorium last evening.

The Australian singer, most generous with his encores, presented a five-part program; which was augmented by a group of piano solo by his accompanist, Howard Kubik.

This is the first of the series of concerts given this winter by Bristol Co-operative Concert Association.

"Come Let's Be Merry!" an old English air; and "Sound an Alarm" from "Judas Macabeanus", formed the first bracket of vocal selections.

The second group, sung in French were works of Duparc, Chausson, Faure and Fauriol. The third presentation was an aria: "La fleur que tu m'avais jetee" (Bizet).

Mr. Kubik, in addition to his piano solos "Seguidilla (Albeniz)", and "Staccato Etude" (Rubinstein), played "Danse Soliloque," a burlesque on swing, written by his brother.

Four Gilbert and Sullivan airs by Mr. Dudley proved very popular, the singer having excellent opportunity to interpret various characters of the operettas.

His final group of selections included: "Invictus" (Hahn); "Go, Lovely Rose" (Quilter); "Springtime"; and "Lord Randal" (Scott). His encores included "One Alone," "Waltzing Matilda," "At Night" and "The Business of Love."

TELLS EXCHANGEITES OF AIRCRAFT INDUSTRY

Ira L. Wilson, of Fleetwings, Speaks of Advances in The Production Line

GREAT PROGRESS MADE

Ira L. Wilson, vice president in charge of production at Fleetwings, Inc., spoke before members of the Exchange Club last evening.

Speaking of the progress of the aircraft industry during the present emergency, Mr. Wilson said that it had been necessary to change the industry from an experimental stage to one of production. This task was not an easy one and the processing of tools and jigs was only one of the problems. "We had to convince the engineers and inventors that efficiency would pay. In 1939 we were working on small orders and the cost of tooling made production methods prohibitive. With the advent of the war, however, we received our first large orders and the stage was set for the introduction of production methods."

Mr. Wilson gave several illustrations of the success of production methods. "In construction of gas tanks we were able to reduce the number of man hours necessary to complete the job from 150 hours to 47, by simply applying such methods as straightening out the line, adding supervision of the complete process, improving lighting and finally the application of time, study and a wage incentive. This can be further reduced by proper tooling and the making of jigs and six hours would not be impossible."

"Fleetwings was the first industry to use the assembly line in the making of tails, wings, stabilizers and ailerons. There is really no fundamental change in the methods used."

For an illustration Mr. Wilson explained that "under the old method five jigs and crews were used to complete the entire tail assembly. Under the assembly line the five jigs and crews each do a certain part of the work or 1-5 of the complete job. This method has obvious advantages. The crew does not need skill in all phases of the work, there are fewer operations and hence greater skill. There are less tools needed and time is saved and finally there is an incentive to the crews since no one wishes to hold up the line."

Mr. Wilson gave many illustrations of the saving in man hours, cost of production and increased speed in output under the new program. His talk was greatly appreciated by the members of Exchange, who responded with a rising vote of thanks.

President Russell W. DeLong presided over the meeting.

GIVES COMPREHENSIVE ANALYSIS OF POPULATION OF BRISTOL AS REVEALED THROUGH THE FEDERAL CENSUS OF 1940

The following address on "Facts About Our Population" was delivered at the meeting of the Bristol Rotary Club, Thursday, November 5th. The talk was a comprehensive analysis of the population of Bristol as revealed by the Federal Census of 1940.

By John O. Stenmer

Manager, Bristol Office

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.

When the census man came into our homes in April, 1940, with his sheet of personal questions about each member of the household, there were few indeed who realized the significance and value of the data that Uncle Sam was collecting about his great family. Not only is the material gathered important, useful knowledge about the American population of 1940, but the figures give us a detailed account of our city which should lead to a better understanding of the people that make up our community.

The figures show that we had about 132 million people in the United States in 1940, which is an increase of 7.2 per cent over that of 1930. This increase is less than half of the increase in 1930 over 1920. (We have 134 million today.)

What has happened in the State? Pennsylvania had a population of 9,990,189 as of 1940 (or about 10 million), increase of 2.8% over the previous decade. Let us take a look at our own city and see if we can get some idea how it has grown to its present

SAYS ALL MUST SHARE EFFORT FOR VICTORY

"Serving Wartime Needs" Is Title of Education Week Essay

WRITTEN BY STUDENT

The following, "Serving Wartime Needs," is the last of a series of articles written by students of the Bristol high school in observance of American Education Week:

By Jean Bielecki, S-2

"We must all do our part to win this war." This familiar phrase has rung throughout the nation repeatedly. Children as well as adults are included, for we all must help to be the victors.

Have you ever sat down and thought what you have done to help Uncle Sam win this war?

It takes every true blooded American of this country to keep the home-front safe.

Yes, you are doing your part if you dispose of your scrap and rubber, but have you ever reminded yourself to wear a heavy coat on a cold day, and eat a good warm breakfast before doing your daily duties? Doctors are too scarce to be bothered by this sort of illness. They are needed to keep our boys in good health.

Buy a war stamp with that movie-money, don't be afraid you won't get anything out of it, because Uncle Sam will pay back every cent with interest that you loan him, to keep this country free. Buy war stamps and bonds, for the rent is due on a wonderful, secure home—The United States of America.

As I walk down the street I see boys on the street corner, standing there idly, as if there was nothing to do. These boys are wasting precious time. Those fifteen or twenty minutes which they are squandering could be devoted to defense groups or even the

GIRL, 16, HELD UP AT POINT OF "BUTCHER KNIFE" AND ROBBED OF POCKETBOOK CONTAINING SUM OF MONEY

Hold Up Occurs on Beaver Street Opposite the Leedom Mills—Victim Thrown to Ground and Threatened With Knife If She Made Outcry—Police Make Thorough Search of Section But Fail to Get Any Trace of Man Answering The Description Given Them.

A 16-year-old girl was held up at the point of a "butcher knife" early last evening and robbed of 20 cents and her glasses. The victim of the hold-up was Aileen McGerr, 16, of 713 Garden street.

The hold-up occurred on Beaver street, opposite the Leedom Carpet Mills.

According to the police, Miss McGerr was walking on Beaver street in the direction of Walnut street. Shortly after she had crossed the Beaver street bridge she became aware of a man following her. As she reached a dark and lonely spot opposite the Leedom mill the man grabbed her from in back, throwing her to the ground.

"If you holler, I'll stick this in you," the man is quoted as saying, while brandishing the knife over her.

The highwayman then grabbed the girl's pocketbook and ran across the field nearby, disappearing into the darkness.

Miss McGerr sought protection at the gate house of the Leedom mill.

Miss McGerr gave a general description of her assailant and police at once made a thorough search of the neighborhood, going over every inch of the fields and lots in the neighborhood.

The man is described as being about 5 feet, 8 inches tall, and of medium build.

Four of Santa's Steeds Make Debut At Zoo

Dasher, Dancer, Prancer and Vixen, four of Santa's famous steeds, made their debut at the Philadelphia Zoo last week. They are the first reindeer to be seen at the local Zoological Garden in 16 years.

The newcomers, all lady reindeer except Dasher, have been installed in one of the Zoo's deer pens and there they will remain until December 24th when Santa doubtless will borrow them for his annual ride over the roofs and chimneys of all good boys and girls.

Reindeer, until recently, have done poorly in captivity in this part of the world. During winter weather they thrive but during summer they previously did not do well, falling prey to botflies, which laid their eggs in the reindeer's flesh. Recent experiences in other zoos, however, plus changes in diet, have made it possible to keep them much better.

The native home of the reindeer is in northern Europe and Asia, where the wealth of Laplanders and Siberians is determined by the number of animals each man possesses. They serve as beasts of burden, and their flesh, hide and milk are important items of commerce in the far north. Fifty years ago reindeer were introduced and acclimated in Alaska and more recently in northern Canada.

WHAT OUR BOYS ARE DOING TO WIN THE WAR

CRAIG FIELD, Ala., Nov. 13.—William Clayton Krames, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Krames, of 318 Cleveland street, received his Army Air Forces "Wings" and diploma today as he completed his aviation cadet training at the Advanced Flying School, Craig Field, Selma, Alabama. He was a member of the largest class ever sent forth into the combat forces of our country's growing air arm, from this the Army's first and largest specialized fighter training school.

The award of his diploma meant a second lieutenant's commission for the new graduate, who successfully completed the intensive eight-and-one-half months cadet training course. His schooling has been all-inclusive in formation work, navigation, instrument procedure, ground and aerial gunnery and combat flying.

Allied Air Power Bombs Tunisia

London.—Allied air power was brought to bear against Tunisia today as a combined striking force of American and British troops was reported to have crossed the western frontier of the French protectorate to give battle to German units attempting to maintain a foothold in North Africa.

In the east, Britain's Eighth Army moved into the port of Tobruk. The British Middle East Command announced for the second straight day that the Axis held airdrome in Tunisia had been heavily bombed by planes based on Malta.

The Vichy radio conceded full-scale aerial assaults were being made against Tunis and said the Tunisian capital had two air alerts today after undergoing a bombardment during the night for two hours, 15 minutes.

U. S. Casualties Light in North Africa

London.—United States casualties since the American invasion of North Africa have been extremely light according to preliminary information, an American spokesman at Allied headquarters in London said today.

He disclosed that the American forces captured numerous members of the German armistice commission caught in North Africa by the surprise assault. Axis submarines, he said, were drawn as if by a magnet to Allied convoy routes and ports in large numbers and were extremely active.

PASS THE AMMUNITION

The future casts dark shadows upon the brightness and exuberance of the American household scene. Housewives should be urged to hang on to their fancy gadgets for the kitchen, to wrap the bathtub in cotton wool for the duration. If they don't preserve what they have, the WPB will see to it that they get something far less fancy as a substitute. The future of American kitchens and bathrooms is as glamorous as WPB can make it.

From a peacetime total of 450 items of kitchen enameled ware the board has reduced production to a wartime limit of twenty-five items. Approximately 10,000 tons of steel will be saved annually by this reduction. Types of cast iron kitchenware will drop from 200 to twelve, with an estimated saving of 6,170 tons of pig and scrap iron.

All kettles hereafter manufactured in the United States must be of one type. And so on through the list of utensils.

The lady of the house will rise in the morning, bathe in her "temporary" plywood bathtub (no kidding), use her new glamorous kitchen equipment to get breakfast, sweep out her house with a broom and attack the ironing with a good old-fashioned flatiron heated on the stove.

She can accept all these minor changes and some major ones in her housekeeping habits with the happy thought that she is aiding the fight against the Axis. Vacuum cleaners, electric toasters, automatic refrigerators, may vanish from the household. The non-metal bathtub may, and probably will, spring a leak. But the housewife, humming "Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition," will know that all is well.

SECOND TO NONE

America's growing Army, now inexorably stepping up its pressure against the enemy on a half dozen fronts, will receive a new increment of a million men before the first of the year. That will bring the total to approximately 5,500,000. During 1943 the Army will be increased by the addition of 2,000,000 more inductees, for a grand total of 7,500,000. This American Army, when well trained and fully equipped, will be a match for any other in the world regardless of size.

This is not empty boasting. We have the materials and the machines for making our Army the best equipped in the world. On top of that we have a soldier morale that already has manifested itself on a number of fronts. Add to that native ingenuity and the boon of a sense of humor, and it builds up to something close to invincibility.

According to administration plans, most of the 2,000,000 to be drafted next year will come from the 'teen age ranks, boys of 18 and 19, many of whom are now in school or college. Industries are not to be stripped of essential production men.

Americans have ample reason to wish that these young men did not have to go. But war is war. We have enemies in the East and in the West who have dedicated themselves to our destruction. Young American boys must go into battle because in this war started by the Fascists young boys of the predatory Axis sink our ships, man planes that bomb innocent men, women and children and occupy the front lines wherever the enemy is engaged in his program of conquest and destruction.

my nephew," said Mrs. Orrick. "He sits restless with nobody to talk to but me."

Darnley climbed the steps as Peter got to his feet, grinning and extending his hand.

"Miss Darnley Carfax—my nephew, Mr. Orrick," smiled Mrs. Orrick, primly.

"I instigated it," said Orrick. "I said to my aunt, 'Auntie, if you don't introduce me to that girl two doors away I'll create a scandal!'"

"Well, you set right here on the front stoop where everybody can see you," said Mrs. Orrick, before she left them, "and I guess no tongues'll go wagging."

"You've been ill?" asked Darnley. "We'll skip that. Have you got a favorite topic?"

Darnley's eyes twinkled. "Artists," she said.

"Miss Carfax, you're a smart girl. You're a genius. How did you know that the only topic an artist really can do justice to is himself?"

"I read it in a book," said Darnley. "Would you mind taking off your hat?"

"What for?"

"With your face and hair you can't wear a hat like that. It doesn't compose. It gums up the picture. I'll have to go shopping with you."

Darnley was not offended. Rather, she enjoyed it; more than that, she determined to profit by it.

"We have one millinery shop, and it has a wide selection of six hats, most of which are for women of sixty. You take what you can get."

She removed the offense. "By Jove!" exclaimed Peter. "How do you do!"

"And you?" parried Darnley. "You act as though you think me beautiful."

"There are two ways of telling if a girl is beautiful—first, to see her properly dressed; second, to see her—"

Unfortunately, the facilities of Colby will not let you see me properly dressed," interrupted Darnley. "As to my figure, my latest measurements are almost exactly those published by an artist as ideal."

"What artist?"

"A man named Peter Orrick."

He nodded. "The world's greatest authority," he said firmly. He shrugged his shoulders, half closed his eyes, tilted his head, and studied her. Then he declared: "Now that you have been assured by an expert that you have beauty, what do you propose to do about it?"

"Go and think it over," she said, getting to her feet. "Thank you, Mr. Orrick."

"You are quite welcome, Miss Carfax," he said ironically. "I shall be in your lovely village for a couple of weeks."

"How nice for Colby!" she said, and proceeded with straight back and erect shoulders down the steps and along the walk toward the business section of the town.

"Incredible," said Peter Orrick to himself. "And interesting too."

Next afternoon Peter came down from the porch to meet Darnley as she passed. "What sort of debauchery does this town afford?" he asked.

"The movies and ice-cream soda," she said. "May I ply you with entertainment?"

"If you'll answer questions." "About what?"

"Artists," she said, "and models." "That subject always comes up," he remarked ruefully.

"I'm interested in the professional side of it," said Darnley. They walked on down the street and stopped in Green's Drugstore for chocolate sodas; then, instead of going to the motion pictures, they strolled.

"Commence," she commanded.

"Models," he said, "used to be models. Today everybody takes a hack at it. Everybody from society matrons to street sweepers. There are men, women, and children models."

"I'm not interested now in the men and babies," she said. "How does a girl get to be a model?"

GOLDEN LADY by Clarence Budington Kelland

SYNOPSIS

Darnley Carfax, at 17, discovers she is more than just good looking and that beauty might become a useful commodity eventually just as musical, painting, literary talents might prove. She lived in the little town of Colby with Grandpa Colfax, owner of a saw mill, highly respected citizen, and a philosopher of parts. At the supper table, Darnley, still puzzled by her ambition, has asked her grandfather: "Am I beautiful?"

CHAPTER TWO

"Lemme get a good squint at ye," he said. "Stand up 'n' kind of whirl around. . . . Turn around sideways. Doggone! I swan to man! Grown up to a pint where you're concerned if you're perty. Ye kin set down agin'."

"Am I, or not?" she asked. "It 'ud be best my luck when I was cal'latin on a peaceful old age," he said.

"What would?"

"To notice ye was one of the handsomest girls I ever see."

"Beautiful—really beautiful?"

He stared at her, with bushy brows almost touching. "So blasted beautiful," he said, "that it's probably a-goin' to pizen my declination. I was kind of afraid of it. Later I was loakin' the other way so's not to notice it."

"Why, Grandpa?"

"Because you're so ter rification perty that trouble's bound to come of it. It's dangerous for a girl to look like you do. And I was plannin' on peace 'n' comfort."

"Dangerous! Why is it dangerous?"

"Fur a number of reasons. First one is—it'll go to your head 'n' you'll make a dum fool of yourself. In the second place, every male critter in the world 'll be arguin' ye to make a fool of yourself. 'N' third, because the'll be fightin' over ye. The fourth is you'll think jess because you're sightly you deserve a lot more 'n' you're entitled to git."

"Is it really so? Do you think you are a good judge?"

"Young woman," said Grandpa Carfax, "the 'hain't no more profound student of magazine covers 'n' bathing-suit advertisin' than me. If it come to a pinch I'd qualify as an expert. Now shot up 'n' eat."

Darnley felt a great surge of elation well up within her. She was indeed, beautiful. If it were not true Grandpa Carfax would never admit it. For he was not an old gentleman to fan anybody's vanity. But she was also a little frightened.

"Grandpa," she asked, "what will I do with this—this beauty?"

"That's the pint," he said. "It's kind of like havin' a hippopotamus left to ye by last will 'n' testament. Ye don't know how to harbor the conarned critter." He thrust a gnarled hand through his mass of white hair. "Comin' seven-ton, hain't ye?"

"Yes, Grandpa."

"Wa-al, best advice I kin give ye is to sort of put it in the savin' bank fur three-four years. Whilst both of us think about it. Beauty's got a lot of uses one way and another. Ye kin jest marry with it 'n' try to settle down. Or ye kin realize on it, like it was a gold mine or a delicatessen store. It's capable of fetchin' a sight of happiness or a sight of misery. Men 'll love ye 'n' covet ye. Wimmen 'll cat-eat ye. However it goes, you're in fur a high old time, and I got to see ye through it."

He pushed back his chair and got up to his full height. "My advice to ye now, young woman, is to forget it. Leave it to grow, 'n' behave yourself becomin'. But, bein' headstrong, 'n' ye your pa, the's no tellin', Doggone."

He walked to the door, where he paused and turned.

"Lemme tell ye baby," he said, "in the hull world the's nothin' like lovin' 'n' bein' loved. The's nothin' like findin' one feller ye kin worship 'n' bein' worshiped back by him. Love one man till ye die, and be loved by him. And never look at no other one of ye. I've said my say, 'n' it won't do no good. Like your pa, you're the experimentin' kind. Now, go occupy your mind, 'n' keep away from mirrors till you're twenty-one."

On the third day of the young artist's visit, Mrs. Orrick called to her as she was passing, eyes straight before her and obviously unaware that a young man was anywhere in the vicinity.

Darnley halted and turned with lifted chin.

"I wish you'd come up and meet

It was thus that certainty of her possession of authentic beauty came to Darnley Carfax. Curiously enough, it did not stir her vanity. It did not go to her head, as beauty sometimes goes to the heads of young girls. Even then—though of course she delighted to have it—she regarded it as an asset, as a piece of property upon which she must realize. It was as if she had discovered a wonderful singing voice, or an ability to paint or to write—a thing that must be developed as a talent and used. She was rather cold-blooded about it.

Older people are always asking young people the silly question what they mean to do when they get older. Darnley could have answered this promptly, but she was too astute ever to do so. Her mind was made up on the point. Suppose someone had asked her what she was planning to do with her life. If she had replied frankly she would have said, "I'm going to be a professional beauty."

In a little town such as Colby was, a planning mill places one among the aristocracy. So does a hardware store or a fire-insurance business or an apothecary's shop. There was not a great deal of money in the village of two thousand citizens; though Mr. Panard, who owned the bank, was regarded as a rich man. By birth and position in Colby Darnley Carfax enjoyed the best socially that the place had to offer.

It was, of course, a small world, but it was a decent, self-respecting, old-fashioned world. Consequently, wise as she may have thought herself, she was startlingly un sophisticated even when she neared her twentieth year.

The young of the species spoke in awed tones of Gertrude Newsome, a pretty blonde who had rifled her father's till and run away with a stranger. By birth and position in Colby Darnley Carfax enjoyed the best socially that the place had to offer.

Decontamination Work Explained by Doctor

ularly is sabotage dangerous to our community, as well as the country at large.

"At first the local governing bodies of each community took charge of establishing civilian defense set-ups, but that later the Army took over, with Colonel Churchill Williams at the head of this area of defense. Franklin Wallin was made co-ordinator of Bristol Control Center. The board proceeded to organize the center, but when it came to the decontamination center, it met with difficulties, finding that the ones already set up at League Island and Brooklyn Navy Yard were not open to the public for inspection. Dr. H. Doyle Webb, who is in control of organizing this center, contacted Army officials, and after much research, the work was started on the local decontamination building.

Dr. Wagner stated that the purpose of the center is to clean or decontaminate persons exposed to deadly war gases. He explained what procedure is followed. He told that the workers at the center would be volunteers as in the other defense units, and that Dr. Webb is in charge of organizing the group. This center is to take care of lower Bucks County. Dr. Wagner stressed the need for each organization such as air raid wardens and auxiliary police, etc., becoming thoroughly familiar with the odors and symptoms of gas poisoning. He said that the concentration of gases is a matter of yards, but that they might linger for several days in ditches or low places.

He stated that the medical aid needed in case of a disaster must be cared for by the civilian defense organization, and that "we must not confuse them with the duties of the Red Cross." He added "The Red Cross was ready and willing to step in and help us if the need arises but the civilian defense groups must learn and be prepared to take care of the cases themselves, as the duties of the Red Cross are many.

Dr. Wagner told us that at a time like this, the safety of a community comes before the safety of an individual, and that a person contaminated by gas would have to be cleansed of gas before being treated for his injuries. This is to prevent contamination of the hospitals or casualty stations by the gassed person.

Refreshments were served, and a social hour enjoyed.

THE CAPITOL WHIRL

By International News Service

HARRISBURG, Nov. 10—(INS)—Organization of the 1943 Legislature has not been decided, according to Governor-elect Edward Martin, but several legislators are standouts to assume the leadership in both Houses. . . . Sen. Charles H. Ealy, Somerset Republican, can be president pro tempore again if he wishes because the Republicans lack strong leaders in the upper chamber. . . . A prediction that Sen.

Leroy E. Chapman, Warren Republican, would be named president pro tem can be discounted because he supported the candidacy of U. S. Sen. James J. Davis in the G. O. P. primary and turned his county in for Davis by a good majority. . . . Sen. James A. Getz, Allegheny Republican, may relinquish the job as majority floor leader, the past he held since 1941, because he expressed a desire at the end of the last regular session to retire and reiterated his sentiments during the 1942 special session. . . . Sen. O. Jacob Tailman, Lehigh Republican, has been mentioned for the position.

In the House, firmly Republican again, either Rep. Thomas B. Stockham, of Bucks, or Rep. H. David Sarge, of Lebanon, is expected to be chosen Speaker to succeed Elmer Kilroy, unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor who did not run for re-election to the House. . . . Stockham is a stand-out for Speaker because he has been a Representative since 1935 while Sarge came to the House in 1939. . . . If Stockham is elected, Sarge probably will take over the job of floor leader.

On the Democratic side, Rep. Albert S. Readinger, of Berks, is expected to be selected minority floor leader by his party. . . . First elected to the House in 1936, Readinger was a valuable aid to floor leader Leo A. Acterman, of Monroe, during the last two sessions. . . . In the Senate, Bernard B. McGinnis, of Allegheny, or Harry Shapiro, of Philadelphia, are contenders for the minority floor leader's post. . . . Shapiro, one of the most able men in the Legislature, may lose because he ran into some difficulties with members of his party during the 1942 session. . . . McGinnis acted as minority floor leader during the waning days of the session.

The Pennsylvania Nautical School's training ship, the Keystone State, was sold in 1936 by the U. S. Coast Guard for $6,605 and re-purchased in 1941 by the Maritime Commission for $45,000, according to a report submitted to Congress by Rep. Bland, Chairman of the House Merchant Marine Committee. . . . The report included statements from Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, Chairman of the Maritime

Commission, that the boat was sold to a private concern which made extensive repairs and the purchase price was considered "A fair and reasonable value considering the lack of available tonnage and the sharp rise in prices of vessels at that time." . . . The ship was assigned to the State's Nautical School in 1941.

PASS THE AMMUNITION

The future casts dark shadows upon the brightness and exuberance of the American household scene. Housewives should be urged to hang on to their fancy gadgets for the kitchen, to wrap the bathtub in cotton wool for the duration. If they don't preserve what they have, the WPB will see to it that they get something far less fancy as a substitute. The future of American kitchens and bathrooms is as glamorous as WPB can make it.

From a peacetime total of 450 items of kitchen enameled ware the board has reduced production to a wartime limit of twenty-five items. Approximately 10,000 tons of steel will be saved annually by this reduction. Types of cast iron kitchenware will drop from 200 to twelve, with an estimated saving of 6,170 tons of pig and scrap iron.

All kettles hereafter manufactured in the United States must be of one type. And so on through the list of utensils.

The lady of the house will rise in the morning, bathe in her "temporary" plywood bathtub (no kidding), use her new glamorous kitchen equipment to get breakfast, sweep out her house with a broom and attack the ironing with a good old-fashioned flatiron heated on the stove.

She can accept all these minor changes and some major ones in her housekeeping habits with the happy thought that she is aiding the fight against the Axis. Vacuum cleaners, electric toasters, automatic refrigerators, may vanish from the household. The non-metal bathtub may, and probably will, spring a leak. But the housewife, humming "Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition," will know that all is well.

SECOND TO NONE

America's growing Army, now inexorably stepping up its pressure against the enemy on a half dozen fronts, will receive a new increment of a million men before the first of the year. That will bring the total to approximately 5,500,000. During 1943 the Army will be increased by the addition of 2,000,000 more inductees, for a grand total of 7,500,000. This American Army, when well trained and fully equipped, will be a match for any other in the world regardless of size.

This is not empty boasting. We have the materials and the machines for making our Army the best equipped in the world. On top of that we have a soldier morale that already has manifested itself on a number of fronts. Add to that native ingenuity and the boon of a sense of humor, and it builds up to something close to invincibility.

According to administration plans, most of the 2,000,000 to be drafted next year will come from the 'teen age ranks, boys of 18 and 19, many of whom are now in school or college. Industries are not to be stripped of essential production men.

Americans have ample reason to wish that these young men did not have to go. But war is war. We have enemies in the East and in the West who have dedicated themselves to our destruction. Young American boys must go into battle because in this war started by the Fascists young boys of the predatory Axis sink our ships, man planes that bomb innocent men, women and children and occupy the front lines wherever the enemy is engaged in his program of conquest and destruction.

SYNOPSIS

Darnley Carfax, at 17, discovers that she is more than just a good looking and that beauty might become a useful commodity eventually just as musical, painting, literary talents might prove. She lived in the little town of Colby with Grandpa Colfax, owner of a saw mill, highly respected citizen, and a philosopher of parts. At the supper table, Darnley, still puzzled by her ambition, has asked her grandfather: "Am I beautiful?"

CHAPTER TWO

"Lemme get a good squint at ye," he said. "Stand up 'n' kind of whirl around. . . Turn around sideways. Doggone! I swan to man! Growned up to a pint where ye're concerned if you're pert. Ye kin set down an'."

"Am I, or not?" she asked. "It 'ud be jest my luck when I was callin' on a peaceful old age," he said.

"What would?"

"To notice ye was one of the handsomest girls I ever see." "Beautiful—really beautiful?" He stared at her, with bushy brows almost touching. "So blasted beautiful," he said, "that it's probably a-join' to pizen my declin' years. I was kind of afraid of it. Lately I been lookin' the other way so's not to notice it."

"Because you're so irrationally pert that trouble's bound to come of it. It's dangerous for a girl to look like you do. And I was plannin' on peace 'n' comfort."

"Dangerous! Why is it dangerous?"

"For a number of reasons. First one is—it'll go to your head 'n' you'll make a dum fool of yourself. In the second place, every male critter in the world 'll be urg'ny' ye to make a fool of yourself. 'N' third, because the 'll be fights over ye. The fourth is you'll think jest because you're slightly you deserve a lot more 'n' you're entitled to git."

"Is it really so? Do you think you are a good judge?"

"Young woman," said Grandpa Carfax, "the 'ain't no more profound student of magazine covers 'n' bathin'-suit advertisin' than me. If it come to a pinch I'd qualify as an expert. . . Now shet up 'n' eat."

Darnley felt a great surge of elation well up within her. She was, indeed, beautiful. If it were not true Grandpa Carfax would never admit it. For he was not an old gentleman to fan anybody's vanity. But she was also a little frightened. "Grandpa," she asked, "what will I do with this—this beauty?"

"That's the pint," he said. "It's kind of like havin' a hippopotamus left to ye by last will 'n' testament. Ye don't know how to harbor the consarned critter." He thrust a gnarled hand through his mop of white hair. "Comin' seventeen, hain't ye?"

"Yes, Grandpa."

"Wal, best advice I kin give ye is to sort of put it in the savin' bank for three-four years. Whilst both of us think about it. Beauty's got a lot of uses one way and another. Ye kin jest marry with it 'n' try to settle down. Or ye kin realize on it, like it was a gold mine or a delicatessen store. It's capable of fetchin' a sight of happiness or a sight of misery. Men 'll love ye 'n' covet ye. Wimmen 'll cat-claw ye. However it goes, you're in for a high old time, and I got to see ye through it."

He pushed back his chair and got up to his full height. "My advice to ye now, young woman, is to forget it. Leave it to grow, 'n' behave yourself becomin'. But, bein' headstrong 'n' your pa, the's no tellin', Doggone!"

He walked to the door, where he paused and turned. "Lemme tell ye, baby," he said, "in the hull world the's nothin' like lovin' 'n' bein' loved. The's nothin' like findin' one feller ye kin worship 'n' bein' worshiped back by him. Love one man till ye die, and be loved by him. And never look at nor think about anybody else, neither one of ye. I've said my say, an' it won't do no good. Like your pa, you're the experimentin' kind. Now, go occupy your mind, 'n' keep away from mirrors till you're twenty-one."

It was thus that certainty of her possession of authentic beauty came to Darnley Carfax. Curiously enough, it did not stir her vanity. It did not go to her head, as beauty sometimes goes to the heads of young girls. Even then—though of course she delighted to have it—she regarded it as an asset, as a piece of property upon which she must realize. It was as if she had discovered a wonderful singing voice, or an ability to paint or to write—a thing that must be developed as a talent and used. She was rather cold-blooded about it.

Older people are always asking young people the silly question what they mean to do when they get older. Darnley could have answered this promptly, but she was too astute ever to do so. Her mind was made up on the point. Suppose someone had asked her what she was planning to do with her life. If she had replied frankly she would have said, "I'm going to be a professional beauty." . . .

In a little town such as Colby was, a planing mill places one among the aristocracy. So does a hardware store or a fire-insurance business or an apothecary's shop. There was not a great deal of money in the village of two thousand citizens; though Mr. Panard, who owned the bank, was regarded as a rich man. By birth and position in Colby Darnley Carfax enjoyed the best socially that the place had to offer.

It was, of course, a small world, but it was a decent, self-respecting, old-fashioned world. Consequently, wise as she may have thought herself, she was startlingly unsophisticated even when she neared her twentieth year.

The young of the species spoke in awed tones of Gertie Newsome, a pretty blonde who had rifled her father's till and run away with a stranger. She was not considered as a glamorous adventuress, but as a lost woman.

It was in this atmosphere of regard for the old-fashioned virtues that Darnley Carfax passed from youth to womanhood, and it left its mark upon her. It will be impossible to comprehend certain actions in her later career if this is not borne in mind.

The great difference between Darnley and her young friends in Colby was that they were preparing to continue the same existence—to marry and to settle down in Colby—while Darnley knew that she would leave the village at the first opportunity to become a part of a life so foreign to what she and the town knew that it might have been on another planet. She was too acute to speak of this or to take any girl friend into her confidence.

It was in June of the year in which Darnley was to reach her twentieth birthday that she saw her first artist. He came to visit his uncle and aunt, the Arthur Orricks, who owned the Busy Big Store, and his name was Peter Orrick. Of course, Colby knew that the Orricks had a nephew who drew pictures for the magazines and lived in a studio in New York, and in a vague way commiserated with them. Darnley had clipped examples of his work to place in her collection of pictures of beautiful women, for he owed his vogue to an ability to make his girls seem alluring, provocative, chic. . .

He had been ill, said Mrs. Orrick, and was coming to the quiet of Colby to recuperate. When he came, he turned out to be a young man of thirty-five or so, who wore large horn-rimmed glasses and lounged about in the sunshine dressed in yellow, flapping trousers and a coat of cerulean blue. The more sophisticated of Colby recognized this as a beach costume. Darnley, from the kitchen window, often saw him in the Orrick back yard under the apple trees. Sometimes he sat in the hammock on the front porch, and at such times Darnley found it necessary to walk downtown upon some sudden errand.

On the third day of the young artist's visit, Mrs. Orrick called to her as she was passing, eyes straight before her and obviously unaware that a young man was anywhere in the vicinity.

Darnley halted and turned with lifted chin.

"I was restless with nobuddy to talk to but me."

Darnley climbed the steps as Peter got to his feet, grinning and extending his hand.

"Miss Darnley Carfax—my nephew, Mr. Orrick," smiled Mrs. Orrick primly.

"I instigated it," said Orrick. "I said to my aunt, 'Auntie, if you don't introduce me to that girl two doors away I'll create a scandal!'"

"Well, you set right here on the front stoop where everybody can see you," said Mrs. Orrick, before she left them, "and I guess no tongues 'll go waggin'."

"You've been ill?" asked Darnley. "We'll skip that. Have you got a favorite topic?"

Darnley's eyes twinkled. "Artists," she said.

"Miss Carfax, you're a smart girl. You're a genius. How did you know that the only topic an artist really can do justice to is himself?"

"I read it in a book," said Darnley.

"Would you mind taking off your hat?"

"What for?"

"With your face and hair you can't wear a hat like that. It doesn't compose. It gums up the picture. I'll have to go shopping with you."

Darnley was not offended. Rather, she enjoyed it; more than that, she determined to profit by it.

"We have one millinery shop, and it has a wide selection of six hats, most of which are for women of sixty. You take what you can get." She removed the offense.

"By Jove!" exclaimed Peter.

"How do you do?"

"And you?" parried Darnley.

"You act as though you think me beautiful."

"There are two ways of telling if a girl is beautiful—first, to see her properly dressed; second, to see her—"

"Unfortunately, the facilities of Colby will not let you see me properly dressed," interrupted Darnley. "As to my figure, my latest measurements are almost exactly those published by an artist as ideal."

"What artist?"

"A man named Peter Orrick."

He nodded. "The world's greatest authority," he said firmly. He shrugged his shoulders, half closed his eyes, tilted his head, and studied her. Then he declared: "Now that you have been assured by an expert that you have beauty, what do you propose to do about it?"

"Go and think it over," she said, getting to her feet. "Thank you, Mr. Orrick."

"You are quite welcome, Miss Carfax," he said ironically. "I shall be in your lovely village for a couple of weeks."

"How nice 'or Colby!" she said, and proceeded with straight back and erect shoulders down the steps and along the walk toward the business section of the town.

"Incredible," said Peter Orrick to himself. "And interesting too."

Next afternoon Peter came down from the porch to meet Darnley as she passed. "What sort of debauchery does this town afford?" he asked.

"The movies and ice-cream soda," she said.

"May I ply you with entertainment?"

"If you'll answer questions."

"About what?"

"Artists," she said, "and models."

"That subject always comes up," he remarked ruefully.

"I'm interested in the professional side of it," said Darnley.

They walked on down the street and stopped in Green's Drugstore for chocolate sodas; then, instead of going to the motion pictures, they strolled.

"Commence," she commanded.

"Models," he said, "used to be models. Today everybody takes a hack at it. Everybody from society matrons to street sweepers. There are men, women, and children models."

"I'm not interested now in the men and babies," she said. "How does a girl get to be a model?"

Decontamination Work Explained by Doctor

 ularly is sabotage dangerous to our community, as well as the country at large.

"At first the local governing bodies of each community took charge of establishing civilian defense set-ups, but that later the Army took over, with Colonel Churchill Williams at the head of this area of defense. Franklin Wallin was made co-ordinator of Bristol Control Center. The board proceeded to organize the center, but when it came to the decontamination center, it met with difficulties, finding that the ones already set up at League Island and Brooklyn Navy Yard were not open to the public for inspection. Dr. H. Doyle Webb, who is in control of organizing this center, contacted Army officials, and after much research, the work was started on the local decontamination building.

Dr. Wagner stated that the purpose of the center is to clean or decontaminate persons exposed to deadly war gases. He explained what procedure is followed. He told that the workers at the center would be volunteers as in the other defense units, and that Dr. Webb is in charge of organizing the group. This center is to take care of lower Bucks County. Dr. Wagner stressed the need for each organization such as air raid wardens and auxiliary police, etc., becoming thoroughly familiar with the odors and symptoms of gas poisoning. He said that the concentration of gases is a matter of yards, but that they might linger for several days in ditches or low places. He stated that the medical aid needed in case of a disaster must be cared for by the civilian defense organization, and that "we must not confuse them with the duties of the Red Cross." He added "The Red Cross was ready and willing to step in and help us if the need arises but the civilian defense groups must learn and be prepared to take care of the cases themselves, as the duties of the Red Cross are many.

 Dr. Wagner told us that at a time like this, the safety of a community comes before the safety of an individual, and that a person contaminated by gas would have to be cleansed of gas before being treated for his injuries. This is to prevent contamination of the hospitals or casualty stations by the gassed person.
 Refreshments were served, and a social hour enjoyed.

THE CAPITOL WHIRL

By International News Service
 HARRISBURG, Nov. 10.—(INS)—Organization of the 1943 Legislature has not been decided, according to Governor-elect Edward Martin, but several legislators are standouts to assume the leadership in both Houses. . . . Sen. Charles H. Ealy, Somerset Republican, can be president pro tempore again if he wishes because the Republicans lack strong leaders in the upper chamber. . . . A prediction that Sen.

 of The Courier for Quick and Gratifying Results

Leroy E. Chapman, Warren Republican, would be named president pro tempore can be discounted because he supported the candidacy of U. S. Sen. James J. Davis in the G. O. P. primary and turned his county in for Davis by a good majority. . . . Sen. James A. Geltz, Allegheny Republican, may relinquish the job as majority floor leader, the past he held since 1941, because he expressed a desire at the end of the last regular session to retire and reiterated his sentiments during the 1942 special session. . . . Sen. O. Jacob Tallman, Lehigh Republican, has been mentioned for the position.

In the House, firmly Republican again, either Rep. Thomas B. Stockham, of Bucks, or Rep. H. David Sarge, of Lebanon, is expected to be chosen Speaker to succeed Elmer Kilroy, unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor who did not run for re-election to the House. . . . Stockham is a stand-out for Speaker because he has been a Representative since 1935 while Sarge came to the House in 1939. . . . If Stockham is elected, Sarge probably will take over the job of floor leader.

On the Democratic side, Rep. Albert S. Readinger, of Berks, is expected to be selected minority floor leader by his party. . . . First elected to the House in 1936, Readinger was a valuable aid to floor leader Leo A. Acterman, of Monroe, during the last two sessions. . . . In the Senate, Bernard B. McGinnis, of Allegheny, or Harry Shapiro, of Philadelphia, are contenders for the minority floor leader's post. . . . Shapiro, one of the most able men in the Legislature, may lose because he ran into some difficulties with members of his party during the 1942 session. . . . McGinnis acted as minority floor leader during the waning days of the session.

The Pennsylvania Nautical School's training ship, the Keystone State, was sold in 1936 by the U. S. Coast Guard for $6,605 and re-purchased in 1941 by the Maritime Commission for $45,000, according to a report submitted to Congress by Rep. Bland, Chairman of the House Merchant Marine Committee. . . . The report included statements from Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, Chairman of the Maritime

Commission, that the boat was sold to a private concern which made extensive repairs and the purchase price was considered "A fair and reasonable value considering the lack of available tonnage and the sharp rise in prices of vessels at that time." . . . The ship was assigned to the State's Nautical School in 1941.

Gives Comprehensive Analysis Of The Population of Bristol

Looking at our people from a racial point of view, we find that 1,759 persons in the city are foreign born white, which means that about 15 per cent of the population were born in other countries than the United States. We will obtain a very good idea of the make-up of this foreign population by looking at the figures showing the countries of birth of these people. The leading foreign nationality is Italian. Here are the figures as given out by the Census Bureau:

Italy	1,234
England	97
Ireland	82
Poland	66
Austria	44
Russia	38
Germany	34
Scotland	27
Netherlands	23
Canada	24
Czechoslovakia	22
Hungary	11
Greece	19
Denmark	7
Sweden	6
France	6
Switzerland	5
Can. & So. America	4
Lithuania	4
Rumania	2
Mexico	2
Norway	2
Spain	1
Wales	1
Turkey	1
Yugoslavia	1
Bulgaria	1
Australia	1

It is interesting to note that twenty-eight foreign nationalities are represented in our population, among whom are one Turk and one Australian. These people have come to our city to make it their home, they help in the economic development of the community, and contribute their part toward the social and educational progress of our city.

Closely connected with the foreign born is the matter of citizenship. In a democracy such as ours, and particularly in these serious times, the civic position of a person is of importance to himself and to the rest of the community. Of the persons of foreign birth, twenty-one years old and over, the 1940 census figures show that 94 males and 276 females are not citizens and there are 99 whose citizenship has not been reported. In a word, there are nearly 500 adult persons in this city who are classified as subjects or citizens of other countries. This is a matter that would seem to require our interest and sympathetic attention.

Another subject very closely related to that of citizenship and to the foreign born is the amount of schooling a person has had. This query is restricted to persons twenty-five years old and over, practically all of whom have completed what we might call their formal education. Of the 2,231 males, 25 years old and over, 238 or 7 per cent show no schooling; 434 show one to four years of grade school; 440 show five or six years of school; 1,015, seven or eight years, or practical completion of elementary school training. 562 show one to three years of high school; 260, four years of high school; 96 have had one to three years of college; 139, four years or more. Putting it another way, we find 7% of the males have had no schooling; 60% of them have had from one to eight years; one-fourth have had one to four years of high school; and 7% have had one to four years of college.

Of the 3,197 females, 25 years old and over, 300 or over 9% have had no schooling; 359 show one to four years of grade school; 462, five or six years of school; 1,001, seven or eight years, or practical completion of elementary school education. 557 have had one to three years of high school; 314, four years of high school. 83 have had one to three years of college; 82, four years or more. In other words, 9% of the females have had no schooling; a little less than 60% have completed one to eight years of grade school; 27% have had from one to four years of high school, and a little over 5% have had one to four years of college.

The educational authorities of this city have done very good service in the field of adult education and have brought illiteracy down considerably since 1930. But there is much work to be done yet and it would seem to me to be up to us as representative of the best interests of the community to aid the educational agencies in directing to them the persons who cannot read and write so that they may obtain the benefits of the primary education that is an absolute necessity in these modern times. It is in the interest of the full grown man or woman that we mature people should direct our attention with a view to lessening the number who are illiterate and encouraging eligible persons to become citizens of our country. Perhaps at this point, some information about school attendance of children may prove of interest. The record shows that 2,021 of both sexes, between the ages of five and fifteen years are attending school, making 90% of that age group, a good showing indicating that we are giving educational opportunities to our children.

What kind of population do we have in this city from the point of view of age? Are there many young people? Do the middle ages predominate? Are there many old people? The census man has learned that about us too. He tells us that 797 are under five years of age; 2,049 between five and fourteen; 2,621 between fifteen and twenty-four; 1,992 between twenty-five and thirty-four; 1,475 between thirty-five and forty-four; 1,455 between forty-five and fifty-four; 850 between fifty-five and sixty-four; 746, sixty-five and over. The total number of persons in this city who are twenty-one years and over is 7,465 or 63%. Please note that less than 7% of the population are under five years of age, about 6% are sixty-five years old and over.

Population authorities recognize that we have come to an aging population in this country. In the past ten years, there has been an increase of 26% in the age group sixty-five years and over. This is largely due to the lowering birth rate and the marked progress in the control of contagious diseases during the past two decades, bringing down the death rate and permitting more people to survive to the older ages.

Having gone into the characteristics of our population in regard to its make-up along racial and national lines, we might now consider the family data as made available by the 1940 census. It is an interesting fact that the number of families in the nation has increased but the number of persons per family has decreased. There were about 20½ million occupied dwelling units in the United States in 1940, an increase of 18½ per cent over 1930, but the average population per dwelling unit (which means the average family) has decreased from four persons in 1930 to 3.6 in 1940. This is a proportional decrease of 9% in the size of the family in the urban population of the country. Examining the figures for Bristol, we find that in 1940 we had 2,778 occupied dwelling units, with an average occupancy of 4.3 persons per family.

A very important part of the figures made available is that which tells us the character of industries in the city and the number of gainful workers arranged according to industries. Military service and the war program have, of course, changed population conditions since the census. It may be of interest, however, to see how we stood by occupation and industry in 1940.

From what I have endeavored to present to you, it must appear evident that we can get a good impression of the character of our community from the figures gathered through the Census Bureau. In a word then, having gotten an idea of the character of the community, it is apparent that there is good work to be done in its interest, so that the next ten years may see a more advanced community, the people of which may be recorded as having lessened the number of illiterates in our midst, increased the number of citizens, and in general promoted the welfare and health of the community. As a service body of business and professional men, representatives of the best interests of the city, I submit the opportunity that is afforded you to utilize the information that I have endeavored to give you with a view to still further promoting the interests of our progressive community.

Today's Quiet Moment

(By the Rev. James R. Galley)
Pastor, Bristol Presbyterian Church

O Thou who art Eternal in the Heavens, look down upon our frailty and forgive our feeble ways. Our failure in thy service is not because of ignorance of the purposes of thy will, but because of the weakness inherent in the human existence. So fortify us with thy presence that we might feel thy strength coursing through our veins. Convict us of the truth that man in his own strength is weak, but in thy strength he is eternally strong. Thus enable us to continue our efforts in thy will and thereby bring glory to thy Name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

GRAND THEATRE

Warner Brothers have again achieved a grand picturization of a best-selling novel in their excellent adaptation of "The Gay Sisters," to the screen. The film, which started its local run at the Grand Theatre last night, has everything that makes for fine screen entertainment.

Starring in the film is Barbara Stanwyck as the fiery, imperious Fiona Gaylord, head of the famous family. Appearing opposite her is composed, level-headed George Brent as Charles Barclay, a millionaire civil engineer whose ambition it is to buy the Gaylord estate.

J. L. Kilcoyne, Esq., Is Speaker At Bristol High

Bristol High School celebrated Armistice Day with a program sponsored by members of the Social Science and Debating Club and with the cooperation of some members of the Junior high school.

An address was given by J. Leslie Kilcoyne, Esq. The students sang songs of World War I and songs of the present war.

The program opened with reading of the Bible by Paul Ruby, president of the Student Council, who also led the salute to the flag. With the accompaniment by Bristol High band the national anthem was sung.

Paul Ruby introduced Charles Boyd, adviser of the Debating Club, who in turn presented Philip Corn. The latter gave a short history of the importance of and the significance of Armistice Day.

The Four Freedoms were explained by Raymond Sidorsky of the Junior high school. A poem, written by John G. McGee, called "High Flight," was recited by Fred Lembeck.

The guest speaker, Mr. Kilcoyne, told of his experiences on the first Armistice Day, November 11, 1918, when he was in the navy. He was at Paris when Woodrow Wilson arrived to lay down the terms of peace.

The speaker reminded pupils of the day when Hitler became the dictator of Germany. He talked of the beginnings of the second world war when

Hitler and his "cut-throats" overran the smaller countries in Europe; and how now, 24 years after the signing of the Armistice, "we are once more at war." He stated: "This 20 years was only a breathing space." He continued: "We can't lose this war; we've got to win; and we must do much better than we have been doing. Everyone has to put 100% effort into the war, and with God's help we will win. When the noise and the din of battle are over, we will still see the Stars and Stripes waving in the wind."

A one-minute period of silence at 11 o'clock was observed.

Lewis Dunbar recited the poem "Flanders Fields," after which Jack Strout read the list of boys in Bristol who sacrificed their lives in the last war. Taps were then sounded.

A chorus of junior high school students recited the Preamble to the Constitution, and the program concluded with the audience singing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Indications are that the volume of Christmas mail will be the largest on record. Already in September, latest month for which figures are available, retail sales had reached a level second only to the record month of December, 1941, according to the Department of Commerce. And sales are rising. Such heavy purchases always presage heavy mailings.

If thousands of our soldiers, sailors, marines and civilian friends are not to be disappointed at Christmas time, the public must co-operate by mailing earlier than ever before and by addressing letters and parcels properly. The best efforts of the Post Office Department alone cannot be enough, in view of wartime difficulties faced by the postal system. The public must assist.

About 25,000 experienced postal workers already have been taken by the war services. Arrangements are under way to add thousands of temporary personnel to postal staffs, but this man power is hard to find and is inexperienced. Facilities of railroads and air lines are heavily taxed by movements of huge quantities of war materials and personnel. Extra trucks are almost impossible to obtain. Winter weather, hampering transportation, is beginning.

The free-mailing privilege granted to members of the armed forces has raised their mailings some 30 per cent. It is estimated. Expansion of those forces also is adding rapidly to the postal burden.

The deadline already is past for mailing gifts to Army and Navy personnel overseas with assurance that the parcels will arrive by Christmas. The New York post office reports that in late October, 350,000 such parcels were handled daily in that office alone. The Post Office Department is making strenuous efforts to avoid such a terrific jam as it faced in 1918 under similar conditions, during the First World War. It can succeed in those efforts—and avoid many heartaches for its patrons—if the public will co-operate by mailing early.

BENSALEM GIRLS BEAT LANGHORNE IN HOCKEY MATCH

Two Goals by Dolores Runyan in Second Half Bring Victory

FINAL SCORE IS 3 TO 1

Langhorne Team Was Much Stronger Than Was Anticipated

LANGHORNE, Nov. 13—Two goals by Dolores Runyan in the second half gave Bensalem a 3-1 victory over Langhorne in a hockey match here yesterday afternoon. It marked the third straight victory for the girls of Coach Helen Smith.

The Langhorne girls were stronger than anticipated and had the ball in the Bensalem territory and did just as well in passing as the Owlettes. But the Cornwells Heights team made good on their shots past the goalie while the Langhorne girls could not push the puck past Vansant.

After a 1-1 first half deadlock, Runyan started the Bensalem girls to victory when she received a pass from Winchester and whipped the ball past the Langhorne goalie and shortly after made victory certain with another goal when she received a pass from her left inside, Regina Sliwa.

Bensalem was first to score in the game as Winchester took the ball at mid-field, worked her way past several opponents, and finally dribbled into the Langhorne defense area to score. But the lead was shortly tied by Harding who when near the Bensalem goal, received a pass from Buckley, and scored the goal.

Although transportation difficulties caused the disbandment of the girls' hockey league, Coach Smith feels confident that had there been a league this season, the Bensalem lassies would cop it as it did in previous seasons winning the championship for three consecutive seasons.

BRISTOL AND BENSALEM ELEVEN TO PLAY ON HOME FIELDS TOMORROW; P. S. D. ELEVEN WILL PLAY AT BRISTOL

Both Bristol high and Bensalem high will be playing on their home fields tomorrow with Bristol meeting the Pennsylvania School for the Deaf and Bensalem playing the Alumni. Games are scheduled to begin at 2:15 o'clock. Neither Bristol nor the P. S. D. is reporting a handsome record this season. Bristol has but one win to its credit and lost five games, it has leadlocked one. P. S. D. has played five tilts. It has leadlocked one and lost the others.

The records are as follows:
Bristol
Opponents
9 Trenton Catholic 12
7 Bensalem 0
0 Conshohocken 0
9 Riverside 10
0 Morrisville 14
0 Langhorne 6
0 Burlington 6

Opponents
7 Conshohocken 12
0 Alumni 0
7 Germantown Academy 11
0 N. J. S. D. 0
0 Bridgeport 28

According to the records, Bristol hasn't scored a point in the last five games which it has lost. It is also noted that Bridgeport beat P. S. D. by the tune of a 28-0 score. Bristol meets Bridgeport next week, so this game tomorrow may prove the paper difference of the two clubs.

Bristol was at its best last week when it held the strong Burlington team to a 6-0 score. In that game, Coach Clarence Bartholomew shifted "Kenny" Maag, end, to a backfield position. Maag more than justified the coach's decision by being a consistent gainer in the game, giving Scancelli much help in carrying the ball. Bartholomew also shifted Brescia to a wing position. Brescia was a guard touchdown against the Owls.

The Great Game of Politics

day there is an increase in the forces against them, which there is no way to match or offset, cannot help but damage the Nazi morale, both at home and in the field.

RIGID AS is their control over the channels of communication, there is no way for the Nazi leaders wholly to keep the facts from seeping through to the German people. And they cannot disguise from themselves that the tide no longer runs their way. Nor is it in either the German leaders or the German people to stand up as long or as well against the sort of adversity the British have stood. All of which is fine, but it should not lead us to believe that the war is over or that there are not some tough times ahead for us before it is. The other night in New York, Mr. Byron Price, chief United States censor, said there was "some bad news coming." And, of course, he is right.

THE EXTENT of our losses in the Solomons have by no means been revealed, but the official statements have said that they were "costly on both sides." When the full facts are available, probably, it will be found that while unquestionably worth it we have had to pay a high price for our Guadalcanal occupancy and success. This should not unduly depress us. Rather it should serve to impress upon the public that, notwithstanding the greatness of the African coup, we still have an enemy in the East, strong, resourceful, treacherous, dangerous and unbeaten—an enemy who still holds the Philippines; an enemy into whose ruthless hands have fallen many thousands of American soldiers; an enemy who will fight, as Ambassador Grew, who certainly knows what he is talking about, says, until they are practically exterminated.

WHILE THE Germans may crack, as they did in the last war, under the Allied blows to follow full North African occupancy, the Japanese are apt neither to crack nor give up. They have got literally to be crushed with force. Thus, to relax would be fatal and too greatly to rejoice prematurely. Clearly, the length and cost of the ultimate and complete victory depends upon the competency of the war effort here. Inefficiency and waste are no longer measured in money but in lives. The time has gone by when the sort of thing that has been going on in Washington can longer be tolerated. A greater degree of concentration and co-ordination is essential. The dramatic and thrilling African news must not mislead anyone into thinking that the war management is efficient or that the machine is running as it should. No more helpful thing can happen than a continued manifestation of public impatience with the retention of small, swollen men in high Government positions—and other things. This is the time for more, not less, pressure and prodding of the Administration to abandon its self-satisfaction and do the job.
